Organic Farming

The major industry responsible for fulfilling the nutritional requirement of every person is the agricultural industry. But the major challenge in the agricultural industry is the crop losses due to attack of insect pests. We are working over the biocontrol attribute of entomopathogenic nematodes (EPNs) against various lepidopteran insect pests since 2019 at Eternal University Baru Sahib, Tehsil Pachhad, District Sirmour, Himachal Pradesh. EPNs were isolated from the soil of fruit orchards from various districts of Himachal Pradesh. Bio-formulations were prepared in the form of sponge stock as a liquid formulation. Various bioassay studies were performed in the laboratory to instigate the insecticidal potential of these isolated EPNs.

After getting the successful results under the laboratory bioassay studies, these EPNs were then applied against the lepidopteran insect pests under protected cultivation. Application of these EPNs has been found as an excellent approach in the field of sustainability. The EPNs are highly virulent, easy for application, safe for non-target animals and are the best alternative in comparison to harmful chemical insecticides. Under the protected cultivation sponge stock formulation of EPNs were applied against the insect pests of cabbage and broccoli. These EPNs were proved as a brilliant source of biocontrol agents than harmful chemical insecticides, in managing the insect pest's population. The produce thus recovered was organic and is free from chemical residue. Even studies were going on in the Department to evaluate the insecticidal potential of these biocontrol agents in the open field also. The application of nematode based formulations will become a boon to the local farmers of this region, for the management of wide range of insect pests.

Departmental visit to the Akal Waste Management Unit at Baru Sahib Campus

Keeping in view the importance of clean environment, department of Chemistry & Biochemistry organised a visit of UG and PG chemistry students to the Akal Waste Management Unit at Baru Sahib campus where Mr. Santosh Shukla interacted with the students and discussed the various methods through which the organic, inorganic and bio-medical waste produced in the campus is managed and treated in the Unit. Further, the students were educated about the different techniques that are used to made useful materials from the waste. One such example is the light-weight brick made up of plastic which has been patented and is also used in the construction of roads in the campus. In addition to this, students were made aware of the day-to-day minor yet crucial issues that pose complications in the efficient working of the Unit and simple but efficient ways through which such issues could be resolved or minimized were also suggested by the Waste Management team so that everybody could contribute in moving a step forward towards the clean environment. At last, there was a discussion round where students asked questions and also shared their views.
