ETERNAL UNIVERSITY E – LEARNING SYSTEM

E-Learning Intervention in Schools, Colleges and Universities

Realising and recognising that E-Learning would be the future trend in education, we have initiated towards empowering the teachers with the requisite knowledge to adopt E-Learning methodology.

E-learning an acronym for electronic learning commonly refers to the use of multimedia technologies and/or the Internet to provide computer-enhanced learning. Focus of E-Learning is to improvise the quality of learning by facilitating access to multiple resources & services. This requires collaborative use of technology, tools and human resources to ensure that the student teacher interaction is more interesting and meaningful.

1. Advanced E-Learning System: ACE E-learning portal offers a combination between the features of a classical learning management system and a web portal. ACE E-learning portal forms the basis of online learning in the Inter - or Intranet. This platform works as:

- Learning Management System (LMS) Learning management system is a web-based software application platform used to plan, implement, and assess learning processes related to online and offline training, administration and performance management. The teachers can create various courses and host it on the server for students to access. LMS allow an instructor to create and deliver content, monitor learners' participation, and assess student performance.

ACE E-Learning System also allow learners to use interactive features such as threaded discussions, web conferencing, discussion forums, newsletter, chat, e-Votes, black board, e-Messaging, news and group calendar ranges, and other methods of communication.

ACE E-learning System enables teachers and learners to create and deliver engaging imaginative and flexible ways. From Podcasting and Blogging through to ACE E-learning connects students to the latest online tools, trends and information. With iPod syncing students have the ability to take their content and learn on the go.

2. Academic content: Huge learning content is available free* on Internet covering all main subjects. The teachers go through the entire content, get latest and required information from Internet, and prepare lessons in advance and get comfortable with using the multimedia content for teaching learning process.

e.g. <http://pptpoint.com>, <http://wikipedia.org>, <http://teacherstv.tv>

Agricultural Microbiology [MICRO-101]

Unit-3: Role of microbes in soil fertility and crop production: Carbon, Nitrogen, Phosphorus and Sulphur cycles

Role of microorganisms in soil fertility and crop production

Soil microorganisms are very important as almost every chemical transformation taking place in soil involves active contributions from soil microorganisms. In particular, they play an active role in soil fertility as a result of their involvement in the cycle of nutrients like carbon and nitrogen, which are required for plant growth.

For example, soil microorganisms are responsible for the decomposition of the organic matter entering the soil (e.g. plant litter) and therefore in the recycling of nutrients in soil. Certain soil microorganisms such as mycorrhizal fungi can also increase the availability of mineral nutrients (e.g. phosphorus) to plants. Other soil microorganisms can increase the amount of nutrients present in the soil. For instance, nitrogen-fixing bacteria can transform nitrogen gas present in the soil atmosphere into soluble nitrogenous compounds that plant roots can utilize for growth.

The microorganisms, which improve the fertility status of the soil and contribute to plant growth, have been termed 'biofertilizers' and are receiving increased attention for use as microbial inoculants in agriculture.

Similarly, other soil microorganisms have been found to produce compounds (such as vitamins and plant hormones) that can improve plant health and contribute to higher crop yield. These microorganisms (called 'phytostimulators') are currently studied for possible use as microbial inoculants to improve crop yield.

Agricultural Microbiology [MICRO-101]

Unit-4: Biological nitrogen fixation: symbiotic, associative and asymbiotic. Azolla, blue green algae and mycorrhiza

Biological nitrogen fixation

Sustainable agricultural systems employ natural processes so as to achieve acceptable levels of productivity as well as the food quality simultaneously minimizing the adverse environmental impacts. There are several soil fertility factors which also contribute to the sustainable agriculture through the control of the soil borne disease, including increased soil microbial activity leading to the increased competition and increased parasitism within the rhizosphere. Greater emphasis has been placed on the indigenous soil microbes which contribute to the fertility of the soil, increased plant growth as well as the plant protection. Plant growth promoting microbes are capable of promoting the growth of the plants directly as well as indirectly. There are different mechanisms of plant growth promotion such as symbiotic or asymbiotic nitrogen fixation, secretion of various phytohormones including the auxins, gibberellins, cytokinins, production of ACC deaminase for the reduction of the ethylene levels in the roots of the crops which further enhances root length as well as the density, production of siderophores, various lytic enzymes such as the chitinases, cellulases, HCN against the pathogens, production of various water soluble vitamins including niacin, thiamine, riboflavin, pantothenic acid which enhances the resistance to drought and oxidative stresses. The use of the plant growth promoting microbes in agriculture can favor a reduction in use of the chemical fertilizers and can enhance the productivity of the crops in an eco-friendly manner.

Agricultural Microbiology [MICRO-101]

Unit-5: Rhizosphere and phyllosphere

Rhizosphere

The root system of higher plants is associated not only with soil environment composed of inorganic and organic matter, but also with a vast community of metabolically active microorganisms. As living plants create a unique habitat around the roots, the microbial population on and around the roots is considerably higher than that of root free soil environment and the differences may be both quantitative and qualitative.

It is the zone/region of soil immediately surrounding the plant roots together with root surfaces, or it is the region where soil and plant roots make contact, or it is the soil region subjected to influence of plant roots and characterized by increased microbial.

Term "Rhizosphere" was introduced for the first time by the German Scientist Hiltner (1904) to denote that region of soil which is subjected to the influence of plant roots.

Starkey (1938) examined the rhizosphere region of some plant species and demonstrated the effect of root exudates on the predominance of bacterial population in particular and other soil microorganisms in general in the rhizosphere region. Thus, he put forth the concept of "Rhizosphere effect / phenomenon"

FE Clark (1949): Coined the term "Rhizoplane" to denote the root surface together with

A typical fermentor is an upright closed cylindrical tank fitted with four or more baffles attached to the side of the wall, a water jacket or coil for heating and/or cooling, a device for forcible aeration (known as sparger), a mechanical agitator usually carrying a pair or more impellers, means of introducing organisms and nutrients and of taking samples and outlets for exhaust gases. Modern Fermentors are highly automated and usually have means of continuously monitoring, controlling or recording pH, oxidation-reduction potential, dissolved oxygen, effluent O_2 and CO_2 and chemical components of the fermentation broth.

Construction Materials for Fermentors

A simple batch fermentor may consist of an open tank made of wood, concrete or carbon-steel if contamination is not a serious problem. Stainless steel is therefore normally used for pilot and production fermentors. Laboratory scale fermentors are usually made of Pyrex glass to enable autoclaving. Where a highly corrosive material is fermented, e.g. citric acid, the fermentor should definitely be made of stainless steel.

Aeration and Agitation in a Fermentor

Oxygen is essential for growth and yield of metabolites in aerobic organisms. Oxygen must be dissolved in aqueous solution along with the nutrients. Air ordinarily contains only 20% of oxygen, but oxygen is also highly insoluble in water. At 20°C, water holds only about nine

Agricultural Microbiology [MICRO-101]

Unit-3: Role of microbes in soil fertility and crop production: Carbon, Nitrogen, Phosphorus and Sulphur cycles

Role of microorganisms in soil fertility and crop production

Soil microorganisms are very important as almost every chemical transformation taking place in soil involves active contributions from soil microorganisms. In particular, they play an active role in soil fertility as a result of their involvement in the cycle of nutrients like carbon and nitrogen, which are required for plant growth.

For example, soil microorganisms are responsible for the decomposition of the organic matter entering the soil (e.g. plant litter) and therefore in the recycling of nutrients in soil. Certain soil microorganisms such as mycorrhizal fungi can also increase the availability of mineral nutrients (e.g. phosphorus) to plants. Other soil microorganisms can increase the amount of nutrients present in the soil. For instance, nitrogen-fixing bacteria can transform nitrogen gas present in the soil atmosphere into soluble nitrogenous compounds that plant roots can utilize for growth.

The microorganisms, which improve the fertility status of the soil and contribute to plant growth, have been termed 'biofertilizers' and are receiving increased attention for use as microbial inoculants in agriculture.

Similarly, other soil microorganisms have been found to produce compounds (such as vitamins and plant hormones) that can improve plant health and contribute to higher crop yield. These microorganisms (called 'phytostimulators') are currently studied for possible use as microbial inoculants to improve crop yield.

Agricultural Microbiology [MICRO-101]

Unit-4: Biological nitrogen fixation: symbiotic, associative and asymbiotic. Azolla, blue green algae and mycorrhiza

Biological nitrogen fixation

Sustainable agricultural systems employ natural processes so as to achieve acceptable levels of productivity as well as the food quality simultaneously minimizing the adverse environmental impacts. There are several soil fertility factors which also contribute to the sustainable agriculture through the control of the soil borne disease, including increased soil microbial activity leading to the increased competition and increased parasitism within the rhizosphere. Greater emphasis has been placed on the indigenous soil microbes which contribute to the fertility of the soil, increased plant growth as well as the plant protection. Plant growth promoting microbes are capable of promoting the growth of the plants directly as well as indirectly. There are different mechanisms of plant growth promotion such as symbiotic or asymbiotic nitrogen fixation, secretion of various phytohormones including the auxins, gibberellins, cytokinins, production of ACC deaminase for the reduction of the ethylene levels in the roots of the crops which further enhances root length as well as the density, production of siderophores, various lytic enzymes such as the chitinases, cellulases, HCN against the pathogens, production of various water soluble vitamins including niacin, thiamine, riboflavin, pantothenic acid which enhances the resistance to drought and oxidative stresses. The use of the plant growth promoting microbes in agriculture can favor a reduction in use of the chemical fertilizers and can enhance the productivity of the crops in an eco-friendly manner.

Agricultural Microbiology [MICRO-101]

Unit-5: Rhizosphere and phyllosphere

Rhizosphere

The root system of higher plants is associated not only with soil environment composed of inorganic and organic matter, but also with a vast community of metabolically active microorganisms. As living plants create a unique habitat around the roots, the microbial population on and around the roots is considerably higher than that of root free soil environment and the differences may be both quantitative and qualitative.

It is the zone/region of soil immediately surrounding the plant roots together with root surfaces, or it is the region where soil and plant roots make contact, or it is the soil region subjected to influence of plant roots and characterized by increased microbial.

Term "Rhizosphere" was introduced for the first time by the German Scientist Hiltner (1904) to denote that region of soil which is subjected to the influence of plant roots.

Starkey (1938) examined the rhizosphere region of some plant species and demonstrated the effect of root exudates on the predominance of bacterial population in particular and other soil microorganisms in general in the rhizosphere region. Thus, he put forth the concept of "Rhizosphere effect / phenomenon"

FE Clark (1949): Coined the term "Rhizoplane" to denote the root surface together with

Q12. What are the suggestion would you provide to improve the teaching learning processes?

Some of the suggestions provided by the students are listed below:

- No suggestion Every thing is excellent
- Everything is goibg good . I don't think there's a need to improve. Thanks
- Focused on practical work more than theoretical work
- To provide in depth and detailed information and conduct high quality practical demonstrate
- Make Education should be child – centred
- Teachers should not Just read PDFs they should provide the knowledge of concepts effectively with examples
- My suggestion is test after 1 unit and enhance field work
- There should be test on completing of each unit so we learn the units agian and again and have good understanding of the topic
- Strong and friendly interaction between students and teachers
- Introduce mini-research projects or thesis work early in the curriculum. Provide platforms for students to showcase their research (conferences, poster presentations).

- Interactive learning
- Teachers should take efforts regardless of pointing out the students for not answering in the class beside this they can support them and motivate them for learning and making them feel mentally peace and another suggestion is the smart class should be there and class should effective not boring and ask questions and clear doubts of students
- Conduct quize weekly
- Provide practical knowledge
- Everything is Perfect
- Hands on practical teaching. Just as it was conducted by pgi personal
- I am satisfied with the process going on
- We need more practical and laboratory hours to learn more skills.
- Weekly test like objective type for JRF preparation
- I think teacher should more focus on practical work rather than theory
- Efforts and Hardwork from both side
- Everything's are satisfied
- Practical teaching should be more
- More improvement required
- Classroom environment as well as field work and internship program should be conducted instead of concentrating only on theory
- There should be more of interactive sessions between teacher and student like discussions instead of them just teaching.
- I am totally satisfied with the process but i would like to suggest something which if followed will b good for academic growth of students - Scholars are teaching us under the guidance of professors, which is a good initiative. However, it is equally important that professors also directly engage with the students. Alongside the lectures conducted by scholars, professors should take at least one or two classes per week to teach the students directly. This would ensure that students receive proper guidance and that the teaching process is on the right track. Such a practice would not only enhance the learning experience for students but also complement the efforts of the scholars effectively.
- Practical work and surveys should be highly included

- Make it more indulging and more or experiment work rather than writing assignment and conduct different workshop in bsc level
- Conduct learning programs, more lab work and group discussions
- They are best.
- Enhance syllabus reference book such as baron and ciceraelli would be good
- Teacher should well prepared.
- Very informative and friendly environment
- Procedure is important so demonstration classes should be held
- More practical knowledge should be provided ...main focus should be on the implementation of the knowledge than scoring system. Students should be given enough chance to do self study as because of the busy schedule they are so occupied in the clg hours only and are unable to learn anything extraa.
