Brief report of activity:

DOE&CS, EU under the EU Societal Welfare Club along with a collaboration with Department of English Studies Akal University, Talwandi Sabo organized a National Webinar on the Topic of Blue Humanities on 18th March 2024. The resource person for the event was Prof. S. Armstrong from University of Madras. Prof. Armstrong with his profound knowledge base and his exposure to different countries explored the intersection of human culture and the marine environment, examining the cultural, historical, and social connections between humanity and the oceans. He called upon the Blue Humanities as a representative growing field within the broader discipline of environmental humanities, focusing on how the sea shapes human experiences, identities, and narratives in a sustainable manner. How the Blue Humanities can work alongside marine sciences and environmental studies to address complex challenges facing the oceans was discussed by and large. The benefits of interdisciplinary approaches in understanding and preserving the marine environment were delineated. Prof Armstrong through the discourse also touched upon the exploration of the ethical implications of human interactions with the sea, including issues related to sustainability, conservation, and the rights of coastal and indigenous communities. How universities like Eternal University can incorporate Blue Humanities into their curriculum, promoting a deeper understanding of human-sea relationships and fostering a new generation of ocean stewards was also a setting agenda of the talk. The Webinar came to an end with a call for action where in Prof Armstrong laid importance on sustaining the blue through the efforts of academia. He requested the faculty, students and scholars to engage with the Blue Humanities, contributing to research, conservation efforts, and cultural initiatives that celebrate and protect the marine environment.
